

Jenny Min

Professor O'Neill

CSCI 301

18 Feb 2021

Redistribution is Allowed.

Before we know the flow of a game company that how the process is constructed. So are websites. There are many kinds of website that codes are uploaded for sharing with each other. How about this about this way? Not all game companies are only developing games. It depends what kind character a game company has. For instance, there are game companies that establishes their own platform independently and develop game software for commercial use, monetary gain. In this case, they would issue their own copy right when they are publishing the completed game so that no one can sneak the source out of the game. Copy right law is involved and a person who violates the law may get penalty such as paying fine that is two hundred dollars at the minimum up to one fifty thousand per work infringed. Do not relive that the violation penalty stops by paying fine. Because violating copy right law may lead to a jail sentence. What if a group of people really need a certain programming part of a software as a reference desperately due to personnel purpose like project or digging in and study about the code? People will have to ask officially for specific programming they would like to look at and probably must give the company some reasons or a purpose why they would want it in some cases.

I would like to issue a license for my code that allows for redistribution. Simply because I would feel so accomplished of my job and be proud of myself. Among many codes, they end up choosing to use my code. It is because my code may be effective for their study or company for their growth. I would not feel good if I do not get credit from whoever using my code, and they would be worried using someone else's code without copyright. So why don't I go for win-win strategy? If everything goes well, I get to introduce my name one more time as a programmer to the world and that may lead to compromise with another bigger requester. Requester will have to purchase my code. They can look at my code and per a hundred lines of code, I will charge the price. Depends on the size of a organization or a company, price is negotiable. At the minimum period, using my code for 2 years are required at first. Unless they decide not to use my code anymore and take it off from their software, five percent off their profit every six months. Preventing stealing my code or plagiarism, if they are turning in the copyright, I shall talk about how their software will fulfill my code spot and I have a right to look over because they may paraphrase everything. Eventually, I can dream about being a couch potato who is rich and cannot even calculate how much money I have.

As a programmer all of us should have courtesy for each other. Respect developer's effort and time. Always, we will have to make sure that the website is free for sharing sources, except illegal website, and reused the code for personnel purpose. It may be legitimate reason to use someone else's code without getting a permission, but it may not for the developer. This is the biggest obligation we must keep in mind. We may copy and paste some one's code to see how the result turns out, but not for commercial use because then, the actual person who created the code is not getting any credit from developing his/her owns. That is not a fair game.

Work Cited

“Computer Science and Computer & Software Engineering: Welcome.” SJSU Research Guides, libguides.sjsu.edu/c.php?g=230255.

KELLERER, HANS. “Computer Science and Computer & Software Engineering.” IIE Transactions, vol. 30, no. 11, 1998, pp. 991–999., doi:10.1023/a:1007526827236.

“License Agreements - The Basics.” Stimmel Law, www.stimmel-law.com/en/articles/license-agreements-basics.

Office, U.S. Copyright. “Copyright Law of the United States (Title 17) and Related Laws Contained in Title 17 of the United States Code.” Copyright Law of the United States / U.S. Copyright Office, www.copyright.gov/title17/.

Sember, Brette. “Understanding Your Copyright License Agreement.” LegalZoom, Legalzoom.com, 20 Jan. 2021, www.legalzoom.com/articles/understanding-your-copyright-license-agreement#:~:text=A copyright license agreement outlines,acknowledging who holds the copyright.